Amsterdam's Western Docklands, a dynamic and vibrant location that forms the backbone of the Dutch port and industrial sector. Strategically located on the western edge of Amsterdam, this vast area is much more than a port; it is a vibrant hub of activity, innovation and growth.

Accessibility

The Western Docklands area is exceptionally accessible, both by land and by water. Located near major motorways such as the A10 and the A5, the area offers quick and efficient access to the rest of the Netherlands and beyond. The extensive road network ensures that goods and people find their way effortlessly to this vital hub.

In addition, the rail network plays a crucial role. With direct connections to the European railway network, goods can be transported quickly and efficiently throughout Europe. For international freight transport, the proximity to Schiphol Airport, one of Europe's largest airports, is a huge asset.

Storage

The Western Docklands offers extensive storage facilities that meet the highest standards. Whether bulk, general cargo or containers, the diverse and modern storage facilities can meet any need.

Activity

The Western Docklands is a thriving hub of business activity. Here you will find an impressive variety of companies, from multinationals to innovative startups. The synergy between different sectors such as logistics, manufacturing, energy and maritime services creates a dynamic environment that fosters innovation and cooperation. The following companies are located in the immediate vicinity: CJ Hendriks, Neelenvat, ACS TMA Group, CWT, Peineman and Albert Heijn.

The area is also a major employer, with thousands of jobs in various sectors.

Port

The port of Amsterdam, of which the Western Port Area is an integral part, is one of the top five European ports. It offers deep-water facilities that can accommodate large ocean-going vessels, and with continued investment in infrastructure, the port continues to develop to meet the demands of modern shipping.

Sustainability is a high priority. Innovative projects such as shore power facilities, green energy solutions and eco-friendly logistics practices are actively developed and implemented, making the port a forerunner in green technology.
